How Tournaments Work in High School Speech

Tournament Structure

- Most Minnesota high school speech tournaments follow the Minnesota State High School League (MSHSL) format.
- Tournaments typically include preliminary rounds followed by a final round.

Preliminary Rounds

- Each competitor performs in three preliminary rounds.

In each round:

- Students compete in a room with approximately 5–6 speakers.
- A judge listens to all speakers and ranks them (1st, 2nd, 3rd, etc.).
- Rankings are relative only to that specific round.
- Each round has a different judge and often a different room.

Purpose of Preliminary Rounds

- Prelim rounds allow students to perform multiple times.
- Rankings from all prelim rounds are used to determine who advances to finals.

Advancing to Finals

After all three preliminary rounds:

- Each student's rankings from the prelims are added together.
- Lower total scores are better (example: 1st + 2nd + 3rd = 6).
- The top-ranked competitors advance to the final round.
- Typically, 8 students per event advance to finals.
- If there is a tie for advancement, official tiebreaking procedures are used (such as head-to-head results).

Final Round

- Finalists perform one more time in their event.
- Judges rank finalists from 1st through final place.
- Final round rankings determine overall placement and awards.
- Preliminary round results do not affect final placements once finals begin.

Section and State Tournaments

Section tournaments follow the same format:

- Three preliminary rounds
- Advancement to finals
- Final placements at the Section Tournament determine which students qualify for the State Tournament.
- The State Tournament also uses preliminary rounds followed by finals.

Key Takeaways for Students and Families

- Every preliminary round matters for advancing to finals.
- One strong or weak round does not determine final outcomes by itself.
- Finals are a clean slate - only the final round determines medals and placements.
- Speech tournaments reward consistency, preparation, and performance under different judges.

What “Dress to Impress” Means at a High School Speech Tournament

In speech, how you present yourself visually matters. “Dress to impress” means dressing in a way that shows respect for the activity, the judge, and your message, while helping the audience focus on your performance.

General Expectations

- Clothing should be professional, polished, and appropriate for a competitive academic event.
- Attire should support your performance, not distract from it.
- Think: job interview, court appearance, or formal presentation, not everyday school wear.

Appropriate Attire

Students typically wear:

- Dress pants or dress skirts
- Blouses, dress shirts, sweaters, or professional tops
- Blazers, sport coats, or cardigans (optional but encouraged)
- Dresses of appropriate length
- Dress shoes, flats, or clean professional footwear

Clothing should:

- Be clean, wrinkle-free, and well-fitting
- Allow comfortable movement and standing
- Stay in place during gestures and movement

What to Avoid

- Jeans, leggings, joggers, sweatpants
- T-shirts, hoodies, crop tops, tank tops
- Athletic shoes, flip-flops, or slippers
- Hats, unless required by the performance
- Clothing with slogans, logos, or graphics
- Excessively tight, revealing, or short clothing
- Distracting accessories or noisy jewelry

Why Dress Matters

- Judges form first impressions quickly.
- Professional attire signals preparation, confidence, and seriousness.
- Appearance should enhance credibility, especially in serious or persuasive events.
- Dressing well shows respect for competitors, judges, and the activity itself.

Event-Specific Considerations

- Attire does not need to match the character unless the rules for a specific event allow it.
- Costumes are generally not permitted, except where explicitly allowed by event rules.
- Clothing should never become a “prop” unless rules allow it.

Final Reminder

“Dress to impress” does not mean expensive or flashy.

It means:

- Neat
- Professional
- Intentional
- Appropriate for a formal competitive setting

When in doubt, it is always better to be slightly overdressed than underdressed. IF YOU HAVE QUESTIONS, PLEASE GET WITH YOUR CAPTAINS.
